

ABSTRACT

A defibrillation system having a physiological parameter measuring device for measuring parameters that may indicate a need for a defibrillator; an emergency level detector in communication with the physiological parameter measuring device for detecting emergency level physiological parameters; and a notification device in communication with the emergency level detector for providing notice of the detection of an emergency-level physiological parameter to a caregiver who can then utilize a defibrillator.